

Virtual Reality (VR) experience health and safety notice

Please read this notice before you book your VR experience

By participating in The Great Kimberley Wilderness ('VR experience'), you agree that you have read and understood the following information.

Your health and safety are important to us. Visitors are encouraged to carefully read the device safety requirements provided by PICO, the manufacturer of the Virtual Reality (VR) headsets PICO Health & Safety and Surround Sync, the technology provider for this shared immersive experience.

PICO and Surround Sync have provided the following advice, relevant to the use for the Great Kimberley Wilderness screening:

- You should be at least 13 or above to use the PICO device.
- Virtual reality experiences may not be the best fit for everyone, if you experience any discomfort, stop using the device immediately.
- Consult a doctor before using if you are pregnant, elderly, or have serious physical, mental, visual, or heart problems.
- Some people may feel dizzy, nauseous, lightheaded, or experience disorientation, or other symptoms when using the device.
- People with photosensitive epilepsy could have seizures, triggered by flashing or blinking displays.
- Some people may be allergic to plastic, PU, fabric, and other materials used in this product.
- Further health and safety information is available in the user manual on the PICO website.
- Further health and safety information is available in the user manual on the PICO G2 4K website.

If you experience any discomfort, stop using the device immediately.

Further health and safety information is available in the user manual on the PICO G2 4K website.

Participation in the VR experience involves a certain level of inherent risk. By participating in the VR experience, you agree to assume this risk on behalf of yourself or a child of whom you are the parent or guardian. To the maximum extent permitted by law, the Western Australian Museum excludes all liability for loss, damage or injury of any kind (including caused by negligence) that you may suffer as a result of participating in the VR experience and you agree to release the Western Australian Museum from any such liability.
