Museum of the Goldfields revisits the golden age of motels

Take a nostalgic trip back to a time when families piled into the family car, and embarked on long road trips in the sweltering summer heat. From oversized roadside attractions to the moment of check-in, Reception this way: motels – a sentimental journey with Tim Ross has you covered.

On tour to the Museum of the Goldfields, Reception this way takes you back to a time when the roadside motel was an integral part of the Australian holiday experience. Motels were stylish and sophisticated, and revolutionised the Australian road trip for families and business travellers.

With convenient parking, mid-century architectural styles and a generous offering of designer mod cons, who could resist booking a motel for their summer getaway? And, of course, there were swimming pools, chance celebrity encounters, sun and surf, breakfast hatches, twin packs of biscuits and a radio in every room!

Developed by National Archives of Australia in collaboration with comedian Tim Ross, the exhibition photographs and promotional film footage featured in Reception this way will revive memories of your past holiday experiences.

Director-General of the National Archives of Australia, Simon Froude, said development of the exhibition was inspired by Tim Ross's passion for Australian mid-century architecture and exploration of the national archival collection.

"We are very pleased to have Tim Ross taking this nostalgic journey with us. Reception this way reminds us of Australian invention and entrepreneurship, and our place in the international tourism market."

Tim Ross found the records at National Archives to be a treasure trove of rich and diverse stories, that have allowed the exhibition to blossom into something truly special.

"The result is this pictorial love letter to a somewhat bygone era, capturing the glamour and convenience of roadside motels, from the east coast to the west, during a time when Aussie families found time to hit the road and take a break."

Museum of the Goldfields Regional Manager, Kirsty Brooks, said the WA Museum had been working with National Archive to develop exclusive content reflecting WA's own icons.

"Anyone who's driven through the Goldfields might remember the old Flag Inns sign in Coolgardie. For many, it was a welcome stop after travelling long stretches of red dirt road. Including it in the exhibition, alongside other national icons, gives a nod to our regions own part in Australia's motel era."

Reception this way: motels – a sentimental journey with Tim Ross is a free exhibition, and will open at the Museum of the Goldfields from Saturday 1 November 2025 – Sunday 15 February 2026.

Exhibition supported by the National Collecting Institutions Touring and Outreach Program.
